

Bracelet On a Rope Tied On Your Wrists

This is the perfect starter trick for a young magician.

A large ring or bracelet is examined by the audience, and your wrists are tied together with a piece of rope. The ring is handed to you and you turn your back for a moment. When you turn around, the ring is on the rope. The rope must be untied to release the ring.

Preparation: You will need a 3-foot length of rope, and two duplicate rings or bracelets large enough to slip over your hand easily. Before you start, slip one of the ring or bracelet over your left wrist and slide it up your arm under your sleeve out of sight. This works well with a short sleeve shirt as nobody expects a ring under a short sleeve. It will require a bracelet or ring that fits past your upper arm and elbow. Young kids have such thin arms this works really well for them.

Let the audience examine the ring to prove that it is ordinary. Have your wrists tied together by a spectator, leaving about a foot or two of rope between your wrists. Then take the ring and turn your back. Slip this ring into an inside pocket of your coat and bring the duplicate ring down your arm and onto the rope. Turn around and show the ring securely on the rope. Have the knots examined, and also the ring. Show that it is impossible to remove the ring without untying the knots. Have someone untie you, and thank him for helping you.

You already have both hands tied so you can follow up with the Handcuff Escape if you want as a second trick. This does require a audience member. This trick is also on my web site.

After you untie the rope follow up with the Ring on a Rope (Drop)
